Non-small cell lung carcinomas (NSCLCs) are heterogeneous in their clinical outcome and molecular alterations, so it is of great importance to understand the biologic correlates of these different subtypes. The epidermal growth factor receptor (EGFR) is overexpressed in many NSCLCs and has been linked to a poorer prognosis. Using enzyme-linked immunosorbent and phosphotyrosine assays, we evaluated tyrosine kinase activity of EGFR in cell lysates prepared from 19 primary NSCLCs. We performed immunohistochemical analysis of EGFR expression in 75 NSCLCs using a monoclonal antibody against the C-terminal domain of EGFR. EGFR tyrosine kinase activity was similar in all carcinoma cell lysates, but EGFR protein expression was strikingly heterogeneous. In addition, complete loss of EGFR was found in five carcinoma cell lysates that expressed high levels of EGFR protein by Western blot analysis. These five carcinoma cell lysates were predominantly associated with adenocarcinomas, had a poor prognosis, and expressed the EGFRvIII mutation. EGFR protein expression in the majority of these tumors correlated with protein expression in corresponding patient biopsy specimens. Immunohistochemical analysis of 75 NSCLCs revealed that only 30% of carcinomas were positive for EGFR protein, although all had EGFR messenger RNA by Northern blot analysis. EGFR tyrosine kinase activity assays revealed no significant difference in EGFR kinase activity between carcinoma cell lysates and normal lung tissue. This study shows the heterogeneous expression of EGFR protein and its associated tyrosine kin 570a42141b
