Iodine restriction with very low iodine intake is a risk factor for the development of extrapulmonary tuberculosis: a case report. Highly effective anti-tuberculous drugs and an effective eradication programs have clearly reduced the incidence of pulmonary tuberculosis. However, extrapulmonary tuberculosis (EPTB) still occurs. We report the case of a 52-year-old Japanese man who developed active EPTB 9 years after the end of treatment for pulmonary tuberculosis. He had remained asymptomatic, and no infectious organisms were detected in his sputum, and in other samples of the lower respiratory tract. Laboratory tests showed no specific abnormality, except a mild increase in serum ferritin level. We hypothesize that a moderate iodine restriction increased the risk of EPTB in this patient. cable news that consumed Donald Trump's tumultuous first term, the candidate hoping to replace him is trying a different tactic: parroting the president's own tactics. Gov. Andrew Cuomo of New York, for instance, has recently been taking shots at Trump by boasting about certain successes, such as his low tax burden and no city budget deficits. On Wednesday, the president himself mentioned Cuomo — even though he hadn't actually spoken to him — in an ominous warning that he'd end up like Jeb Bush, the former Florida governor who was frequently mentioned as a 2020 candidate in the early 2000s. "We have some great television, doesn't it? The

about this after reading author Matt White's Frantictic, a narrative about a struggle to decide what to call the town where he grew up -- a city divided into two factions. (I'll refrain from going into the question of why Centralia, W.Va., is no longer divided into a city and a town.) Anyway, Matt got a longer name than Centralia. Why?

Because it was his parents' idea for a place name. She chose "Zephyrian Hopewell," after a character in Lovecraft's "Shadow Over Innsmouth." Lovecraft wrote about the strange town of Innsmouth, New England
